JEFFREY ALAN MARKS POINT DUME EXTERIOR COLLECTION FOR PROGRESS LIGHTING

After a successful partnership in 2019, L.A.-based Jeffrey Alan Marks has collaborated with Progress Lighting yet again, this time on six exterior styles for his Point Dume collection. "A great deal of my work is building the house from the ground up," he explains. "I am usually sourcing the actual elements and lighting from the first day of construction. Exterior lighting is a big part of my architecture, most of the time designed custom or something found in Europe on shopping trips." Made from materials inspired by his time out in nature, the collection has a decidedly East Coast look and feel, but is versatile enough to work with many architectural styles. "Hook Pond [is] my personal favorite, evoking my summers in East Hampton," says Marks. "It's the perfect fit and scale for our cottage out East with a whimsical English twist my work is known for." progress.lightingnewyork.com

GILD X STUDIO BLACKBURN CERAMIC SCONCE COLLECTION

Known for beautifully curated, bold interiors, L.A.- and Chicago-based design firm Studio Gild has teamed up with SoCal sculptor Caroline Blackburn on a series of handmade ceramic sconces. The textural, amorphous designs boast Blackburn's signature painterly glaze style, and can be purchased as is—via the Studio Gild website—or made to order through a bespoke design experience. There are five styles to start, but more limited-edition designs are planned for future release. "These pieces are one of a kind," says Blackburn. "They are abstract, textural painterly forms created for today's contemporary interior and they push the expectations of what a wall sconce can be and where you might find a ceramic art piece." studiogild.com
